My buddy, Zeno Mano Kovacs, is a 24 years old senior student from Budapest. I contacted him right away when I received his info, and he responded via email and Instagram the next day. Assuming Zeno was such a busy student, I actually invited him several times for a meal but ended up being turned down every time due to his absence in Taiwan.

At a cool noon in early March, I finally got a chance to meet him in person. We stood by the gym and chatted for around an hour, talking about Taiwan, Hungary, and also the exchange program I applied in the next semester. I also prepared a bag of crunchy noodles and a bag of Yu Jan Shin Mini Pastry. I made him tried the pastry there, and I couldn't stop laughing when I saw Zeno tearing it in pieces then put in the mouth, which made the crumbs flying all over the ground. When we talked about the reason he chose Taiwan as his destination, Zeno stated that he is currently doing reasearch among the politics between China and Hong Kong, reagarding Taiwan as a safe place that allows him to inspect into the cultures and do all the reasearch work. Zeno also mentioned that he really loved the climate in Taiwan. However, old, undesigned buildings and apartments are what he really dislike the most.

After the hour-long conversation, Zeno and I headed to different classrooms. Then for the next three months, it's really hard for me to reach out to him since he was spending all his weekends in different countries in Asia. Nevertheless, I still cherish this oppourtunity to have such a deep conversation to a foreign student, looking forward to the next buddy I will meet in the following Program.

(Several invitations were rejected after the talk by the gym)
